HAGERSTOWN, MD – Maya Talk, a lifestyle talk show featuring host Maya Coiner, kicks off season three with an assortment of informative, talk-worthy topics and nationally-recognized guests. Following two successful seasons, the half-hour show returns to NBC25, the NBC affiliate in Western Maryland, on Sunday mornings at 11:30 a.m.

This season of Maya Talk promises local and national information on health/wellness, business, travel, arts and entertainment, self-improvement and more. The show continues to evolve with a growing list of sponsors, industry professionals, and new segments such as “Maya’s Pearls” and “Eating Around the World in Frederick.”

“This is an exciting time for Maya Talk,” said host Maya Coiner, a Baltimore native and veteran television journalist who also serves as the show’s executive producer. Coiner is a wife, mother, businesswoman, actress, and former Miss Baltimore.

“The show is starting to receive national attention and with that, we’re attracting more high-profile guests,” said Maya. “Additionally, we’ve added an award-winning journalist and producer to our team, and nationally experienced production people. They have fresh ideas and a keen sense of what really makes good television.”

This season’s slated guests include: Kevin Liles, executive vice president of Warner Music Group; Ellis Marsalis, author/photographer and member of the renowned Marsalis music family; and Timothy Dean, acclaimed executive chef and owner of Timothy Dean Bistro in Baltimore.

Maya Talk will also welcome back popular guests such as yoga and fitness instructor, Michelle Marzullo, and environmental expert, Juan s. Boston. Stated Maya, “I love to talk, but we won’t just be sitting on the couch. I’ll also be doing demonstrations and hope to travel to different parts of the region and state, to do profiles.”

Maya Talk is sponsored in part by Life & Discovery, BS Environmental, YMCA Frederick, Natural SOULutions, Horse of a Different Color Boutique and The Temple - A Paul Mitchell Partner School.
